

His Story Watchers: Art Sample

His Story Watchers is a self-illustrated early chapter book for readers ages four through six, designed to feel like watching history unfold. Each spread starts with kids on a space station but reads like classical pen-and-ink adventure. The kind grandparents might remember from old storybooks, except these have Star Wars tech and eight-year-olds asking the questions every kid wonders about.

Lines flow from whisper-thin to bold strokes, crosshatching builds shadows that feel ancient and mysterious. Instead of limiting color like some fancy art books do, these illustrations burst with the warm earth tones and golden light that biblical scenes deserve, because why should the greatest stories ever told look boring?

Kaz and Lucy peer through their Time Screen to watch light explode into existence, whales breach brand-new oceans, and the first humans make choices that changed everything. They're doing what every curious kid does: asking "what really happened?" while getting caught up in adventures bigger than Saturday morning cartoons could ever imagine.

This portfolio includes five sample illustrations selected from the completed 2,900-word chapter book manuscript. Full PDF dummy and story available upon request.

Kaz, Lucy, and Sena standing in the Time Screen laboratory aboard the space station

Divine light with dancing golden rays separated from swirling dark cosmic void

Green Dragon with emerald scales speaking to Eve

Adam and Eve walking away from closed gate guarded by angel with flaming sword

Tower of Babel rising into clouds with tiny ant-sized workers scattered across its levels